Hello Juanita,

We are the independent review team selected by the provincial government to conduct a review of the Nova Scotia Accessibility Act. As part of this work, we are reaching out to Nova Scotians to find out what people know and think about the Act and progress since the legislation was enacted in 2017. As someone working in a government-partner capacity to support and advance accessibility in Nova Scotia, your perspectives are valuable.

We are inviting you to take part in an online survey to share your views with us. We are also extending an invitation for you to take part in a confidential one-hour interview with us and/or to submit further comments directly to us via this email address or through our review website. Contact information and links for these options are provided below.

Our consultations with Nova Scotians are taking place from April until July. Results from this review will be shared in a report with recommendations. Thank you very much for your consideration.
